REPORT

OF THE

SCHOOL COMMITTEE

OF THE

TOWN OF FAIRHAVEN,

For the Year 1866-67.

NEW BEDFORD:
E. ANTHONY & SONS, PRINTERS, 67 UNION STREET.
1867.

REPORT OF THE SCHOOL COMMITTEE.

To the Inhabitants of Fairhaven :

Of the many subjects requiring your attention at the beginning of another municipal year, there is none of greater interest than that of the schools, where the children and youth of the town are receiving their education. Whether you are parents, earnestly desiring the happiness and usefulness of your children, or citizens, who must by and by transmit to their care the honor of the Commonwealth and the best interests of society, you are all intimately concerned.

By referring to the appended tables you will find, in a condensed form, the details of what has been done the past year: the number of scholars in the schools, their average attendance, the length of time the schools have been in session, who has taught them, and how the money raised for school purposes has been appropriated and expended.

But these details of material facts do not indicate results. You will not learn from them what improvement your child has made in his studies, nor what impress the influences of the school may have stamped on his character. This is knowledge which no report can give you, which you can only possess as you maintain that watchful care over the progress and conduct of your child which a parent can never delegate to another.

If we estimate properly the importance of our schools, the inquiry whether they have reached or are progressing towards that standard of excellence which their greatest usefulness requires will never seem impertinent.

We wish we could truthfully give a more encouraging answer to the inquiry. For the highest success attainable in the schools, the co-operation of all classes in the community is needed; not only teachers and committees, but parents and people must unite in unwearying efforts to promote their prosperity. But where there is a divided responsibility there are too often general neglect and inefficiency, and we think this is especially true of the interest manifested in our schools.

Because their immediate care and general supervision is confided to certain officials, parents should not feel their responsibility at all lessened. They must see that their children are regular and punctual in attendance, and should enjoin respect for the teacher and obedience to the rules of school.

Home and parental influence and teachings are always felt in the school-room, and are potent there in maintaining or destroying wholesome discipline. The boy who is taught the true nature of obedience, that it is an honorable submission to rightful authority, implying neither servility or degradation, and that it is a sacred duty, will give little trouble, while he who ignorantly looks upon it as a slavish surrender of his rights, will only yield a sullen and dogged submission.

So the child that is only managed, not governed at home, will surely carry his compromising diplomacy into the school-room and become one of the most mischievous disturbers there.

Without seeming to actively co-operate parents may do much to aid in maintaining good order and discipline. Do not accept all complaints as just criticisms, better dismiss the child with an admonition to future good conduct, and if the complaint seem well founded, visit the teacher and learn from him the true state of the case and adjust it with him, always so conducting as to impress the child with a kindly regard and respect for his teacher and the idea that his authority and the discipline of the school are to be maintained. Such an interview between a teacher and the parent feeling aggrieved, must almost surely result in a mutual good understanding and in securing the good of the child and the school.

We say, therefore, visit the schools frequently, and thus become acquainted personally with the teacher and his methods of instructing and governing. Encourage him by showing an interest in the progress of your own children and the advancement of the school in general. We believe the visits of parents and citizens may prove quite as beneficial as those of the committee. The pupils after a time become accustomed to our visits, they are looked upon as a part of the routine of the school system, but the entrance of parents or neighbors into the school-room is an indication of their special interest in the welfare of the school or some particular members of it.

If we seem to give undue prominence to this matter, it is because we believe some dissatisfaction which may have existed in certain cases might have been removed by a visit to the teachers and the explanation they would have been able and glad to make. And we may here observe that in almost every case of complaint which has reached the committee, the complaint has rested on no personal knowledge of the parent, but on the uninvestigated reports of children, accepted as just criticisms and satisfactory grounds for condemning the teachers.

The amount of money raised and appropriated for the support of schools in this town for several years past, gives to each child between the ages of five and fifteen years something over seven dollars. This is a liberal appropriation, and if it could be economically applied would give, we think, at least one month more term of school to the whole town then it is now possible to afford. Most of the schools are in session but about eight months of the year, and we pay our teachers' salaries so meagre that we cannot always retain our best instructors and disciplinarians. We shall suffer in this way until we can offer such inducements as will secure and retain the best talent. The disadvantages of a somewhat unequal distribution of the school money is unavoidable where the inhabitants are much scattered, and where the schools must be multiplied in order to accommodate those who are more removed from the centre of population; but the boundaries of this town and the location of its people is such, we believe, as to admit a change, reducing the number of schools and a more economical expenditure of the money among them, without injustice to any. For this purpose your committee think the present district system should be abolished or the town re-districted, and we earnestly press this subject on your consideration. We do not see how the condition of the schools can be advanced to that degree of excellence which the educational wants of your children demand, without a much larger appropriation than we dare ask for, or the adoption of a system which shall enable us better to economize what is every year so liberally voted. The school terms cannot be made longer, nor can we surely retain our best teachers, or secure better in place of the indifferent.

To illustrate an evil of the present system and even its injustice, permit us to say, that one small primary school, (very indifferently taught,) during the past Summer, cost for each pupil in attendance, $2.25 per month, or between eleven and twelve cents a day. At this rate the tuition only, of all the children of the town, would have cost $20 each for eight months.

It may be said that by reducing the number of schools we shall impose a hardship on the inhabitants of the rural districts, by removing them to distances so great that the younger children cannot reach them in inclement weather. This objection will cease if we can so apply the money as to extend the term from eight months to ten, for though the smaller children might lose some part of the term, they would still be able to make up their full eight months, while the older scholars to whom each added month is so valuable, would get the advantage of the longer term. We do not propose to discuss the merits or demerits of the district system, all we desire is to call your attention to the present unwise and unequal expenditure of the school money, leaving it to your own judgment to devise the manner in which it shall be rendered more available for the beneficient purposes for which it is designed.

Finally, the "suggestions in relation to the schools which the committee deem necessary and proper to promote the interests thereof" are: First, a greater interest in them on the part of parents and the citizens generally. Second, such a re-organization of the present school system of the town as shall allow a wiser and more economical expenditure of the money raised for school purposes; and third, especially greater care and judgment in the selection and appointment of teachers by the Prudential Committees, or else entrusting this duty to the general Committee of the town.

Signed, ISAAC FAIRCHILD, Chairman.
CHARLES DREW, Secretary.
